

Isaac O Wall Barn

In the late 1800's Isaac Wall homesteaded a plot of land near the center of the little valley of Wallsburg at 290 W. Main Canyon Road. He built his home near the road that passed his property on the south, and built a log barn near the border of his property on the north. He cut the trees that were the logs he used to build the barn. Not having metal nails, he used wooden pegs to secure the logs on the corners.

Marvie Wall owned the property after Isaac died and he got a permit from the U.S. Forest Service to cut some trees in Strawberry Valley. After harvesting the trees, he hired Curtis Batty to haul them to the Glen Anderson saw mill where they were sawed into lumber. With that lumber, a hay barn with a lounging shed for the stock was built..

Marvie is gone and his grandsons now own the property. They still fill the barn with alfalfa hay each summer and feed it to the stock during the winter.

Source of information - Ruby Wall

Old World News

In the late 1800s Isaac Wells homesteaded a piece of land near the corner on the north side of Whittaker at 100th Main Canyon Road. He built his house on the road near the corner and the property on the south side built a lot near the corner of his property on the north. His wife and sons that were the logs he used to build the house. Not having much money he used what he had to see the logs on the corner.

Isaac Wells owned the property after Isaac died and he got it from the U.S. Forest Service in 1907 some trees in Spring Valley. After he was dead the trees he died Charles built to haul them to the Old Anderson saw mill where they were sawed into lumber. With each lumber a log from a tree was kept for the stock was built.

Isaac's sons and his grandsons now own the property. They still fill the barn with shingles from summer and used it to the stock during the winter.

Source of information - Isaac Wells